CHECK EGG WASHING

WATER FOR IRON

A note of caution to poultry producers — before you wash eggs, it's a god idea to check the iron content of the water you use.

Dr. E. O. Essary, poultry scientist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, reports U. S. Department of Agriculture tests which show that iron in wash water can greatly increase egg spoilage. The danger level of iron content in water is 5 to 10 parts per million.

Iron can be removed from water by piping it through water-softening equipment connected into the water line.

World peace will not last if it is based on the cash that the U. S. scatters around the globe.

The difficulty about cooperation, international and otherwise, is that not everybody who talks about it, practices it.
